3. Your corrected Form W-2c has two columns: Previously reported and Correct information. The Previously reported column displays the amounts originally reported on your Form W-2. The Correct information column displays the corrected amounts, taking into account the change that was made this week. If an amount is reported in the Correct information column for a particular box, you will use that amount when filing your taxes. If a box is blank, that indicates that no correction has been made to that amount and you will refer to your original Form W-2 for the amount to use when filing.
